Changes to Employer's Quarterly Tax Return (Form 941)

When Congress passed the Families First Coronavirus Response Act (FFCRA), a number of provisions affected employees and employers alike. Because employers were required to provide sick leave wages and family leave wages, Congress granted additional tax credits. As you might imagine, these additional tax credits necessitated some changes to IRS forms.

In particular, the IRS has made changes to Form 941, the Employer's Quarterly Federal Tax Return, to account for coronavirus-related employment tax relief. Starting with the second quarter of 2020, employers will notice 18 new lines to accommodate additional data related to FFCRA tax credits. There have also been some changes to the accompanying worksheets to further clarify the new line items. The IRS has provided revised instructions to help employers ensure they are completing the additional lines correctly, which can be found on the IRS website.

In this whitepaper, we will explain the changes to the revised Form 941 that employers need to consider for their upcoming quarterly tax returns.

Form 941 Basics

Form 941 is an IRS requirement for any employer. Each quarter, employers are obligated to withhold federal income tax, social security tax, and Medicare tax from each employee's wages. Employers must file Form 941, every quarter, to report the wages paid to each employee and the amount of federal taxes withheld.

Form 941s are due on April 30, July 31, October 31, and January 31 for each preceding quarter. For instance, employers should report wages and taxes withheld for January, February, and March on the Form 941 due on April 30th.

It is important to note that you cannot wait until the 941 filing deadline to pay quarterly taxes. Employers are required to deposit their taxes either monthly or semi-weekly, depending on the amount of taxes owed. Form 941 can be filed via mail or online, although e-filing is preferable because it's often quicker and cheaper.

Certain employers are exempt from filing the Quarterly Tax Return, including those with a seasonal business, household employees, and/or farm employees.

Required Information for Form 941

Before sitting down to complete your 941, you will need the following information handy:

- Your business name, taxpayer identification number (EIN), and address,
- The number of employees in your business,
- Total amount of Medicare and Social Security taxes withheld for the previous quarter, and
- Total amount of deposits made to the IRS

Summary of 2020 Changes to Form 941

The good news is that most of the changes to Form 941 are beneficial to business owners. The FFCRA enabled employers to claim refundable tax credits for paid sick and family leave. Businesses could also claim an Employee Retention Credit. The revised Form 941 provides additional lines for employers to report these credits and to calculate the amount of the credit that will be refundable.

The drawback is that the revisions to Form 941 increase the complexity for filers, so many filers are turning to experts to help them sort these changes.

Also, while it is almost always preferable to e-file your Form 941, it is especially recommended during the pandemic. The IRS has had to scale back their mail processing due to COVID-19, so backlogs are expected. E-filing bypasses the issues associated with filing by traditional mail (plus it can save you some postage).

The tax rates for both Social Security and Medicare have not changed. However, the social security wage base limit has been raised to $137,700 for 2020.

Breakdown of the New Additions

Here is a simplified breakdown of the relevant new additions to Form 941 that employers will need to calculate starting with the second quarter of 2020. Please note that sections of the form that have not changed are not addressed.
